BAKING SODA

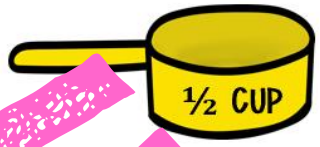

The Constitution is the framework of the national government and outlines how the three branches of government work. Each branch of government has a different job. Influenced by Enlightenment thinker Baron de Montesquieu, the Founding Fathers used separation of powers to break up the powers of the federal government. The Founding Fathers created three separate branches of government to make sure that no one branch became too powerful. The three branches "balance" the powers of the other branches.

How many branches of government does the federal government have?

FLOUR

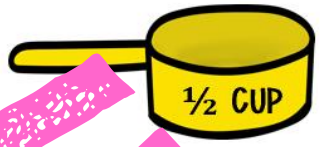

The Framers (founding fathers or members of Congress) knew a new set of rules were needed to govern the new nation. James Madison, Benjamin Franklin, Alexander Hamilton, and George Washington were known as the Framers of the Constitution. They met at Independence Hall in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. After they wrote the U.S. Constitution, the states had to approve it, but it took some time for that to happen.

Where is Independence Hall?

Philadelphia

Washington DC

Boston

Cleveland

Members of Congress work at the U.S. Capitol Building in Washington D.C. An idea for a law, called a Bill, must go through many steps called the Legislative Process. An idea for a bill can come from anyone but only a member of Congress may sponsor and introduce the bill to Congress. Each bill goes to a committee that specializes in that topic. For example, a bill about school hours would go to the education committee because they are experts in that area.

What building do members of Congress work in?

White House

Supreme Court

Capitol Building

House of Commons

The Senate is considered the Upper House because they have powers that the House of Representatives does not have. Some powers of the Congress include collecting taxes, coining money, declaring war, maintaining the armed forces, and establishing post offices.

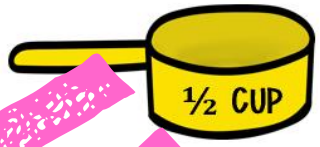

The Senate has the sole power to confirm Presidential appointments and to provide advice and consent to ratify treaties.

Which of the following is a power of Congress?

Coin money

Establish post offices

Declare war

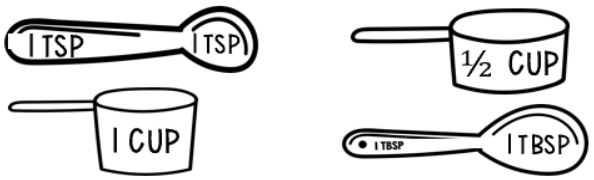

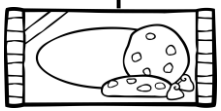

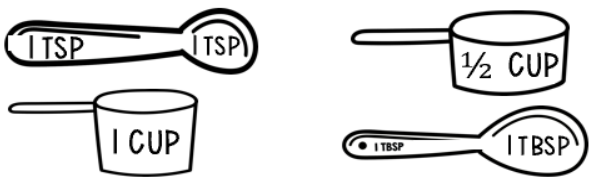

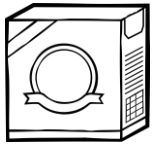

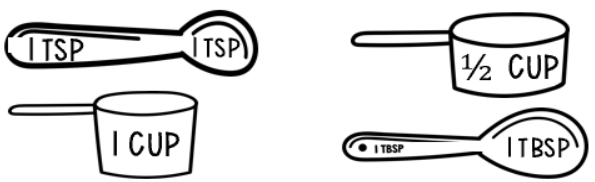

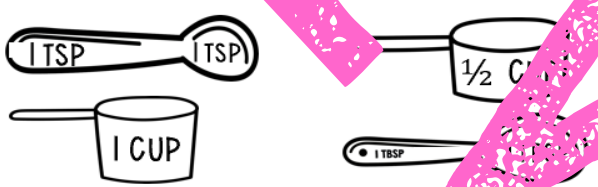

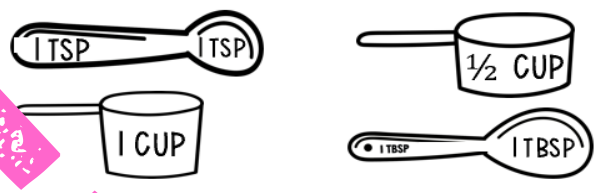

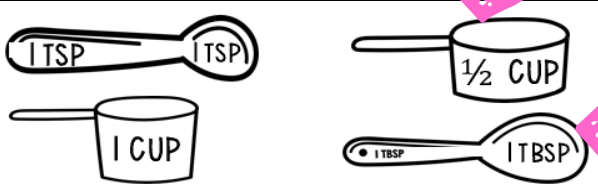

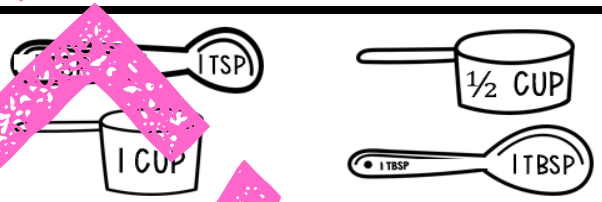

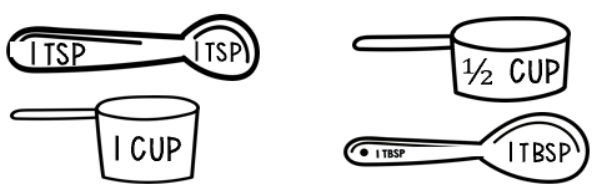

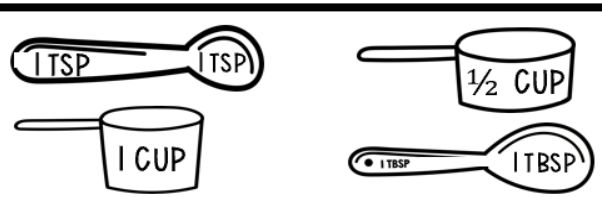

All of the above
