PATRIOTS (INDEPENDENCE)

Patriots were members of the 13 colonies who wanted liberty (freedom) and independence from Great Britain. They felt they weren't treated fairly by the British. Taxes were collected on everything from paper to tea. Because of the disagreements between the colonies and Great Britain, the new voices weren't heard. Without any representation in the British government, they came up with the phrase "no taxation without representation."

Patriots were generally from New England or Virginia, though they were found in all 13 colonies. Outnumbering the Loyalists, they included Native Americans, farmers, and African Americans. Patriots formed a group called the Sons of Liberty. They started the Boston Tea Party in 1773.

Some Famous Patriots were Patrick Henry, Samuel Adams, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Paul Revere and George Washington.

COMMON SENSE

Thomas Paine, a Patriot author, published a short pamphlet called "Common Sense." His pamphlet urged colonists to break away from Great Britain. At the time of publishing, colonists were still undecided on which side to take. After reading Paine's pamphlet, they were convinced of independence from Britain was in the best interest for the colonies.

OUTCOME

Some Loyalists joined the British army and created their own groups like the Loyalists. However, the Patriots won during the American Revolution. Loyalists lost their fortunes, land, homes, and businesses. Some were forced to move to Canada or back to Great Britain.

Colonists declared their independence from Great Britain with the famous Declaration of Independence signed on July 4, 1776. It was drafted (written) by Thomas Jefferson. This document basically declared war against King George III and Great Britain.
