Clue # 1
Did you know?
Federalists and Anti-Federalists had opposing views on the role of government and how it should run after the American Revolution.
The American Revolution was over. The colonies were in an economic depression with a lot of debt (money owed). Shay's Rebellion, for example, showed that the Articles of Confederation were weak and that the nation needed to be united. Federalists wanted to address these concerns.
Having just fought Britain's rule in the American Revolution, some colonists (Federalists) wanted to maintain independence and rebelled against a ruler, king, monarchy, or any other powerful force.

Patrick Henry worried that the president might declare himself a king.
PATRICK HENRY
Patrick Henry was a lawyer, speaker, and governor of Virginia. He was one of the Founding Fathers of the United States.
Henry urged colonists to oppose British rule during the American Revolution. He also helped pass the Virginia Stamp Act Resolutions against Britain's Stamp Act. During the First Continental Congress, he proposed that Congress should establish an army to fight the British. He argued, "Give me liberty, or give me death."
After the American Revolution, as governor of Virginia, Henry fought against the first version of the US Constitution. He was afraid that the proposed Constitution would give the President total power and turn into a monarchy. Ultimately, Henry was responsible for the Bill of Rights in 1789.
